Imbedded within the heart of the bouquet, were found two small pink paper hearts, tied together, with the words, "Milly and Glenn, July 10", thus announcing the wedding of Miss Mildred Doig and Mr. Glenn Miller of Lockport which will take place in the Richard Street M. E. church in Joliet on the 10th of July.

The fifth annual Geuther family reunion of Frankfort township will be held Sunday, June 20th at the Frankfort grove.

From 200 to 250 people, all members of the Geuther relationship, attend the Geuther reunions. This year's meeting is the fifth consecutive meeting since the organization of the reunion in 1933.

The Geuther family in America dates back to 1848, when John George Geuther I. (1805-1889) emigrated from Weidhausen, Saxecoburg-Gotha, Germany.

Today members of the Geuther relationship are found in almost every part of the country, Arizona, Florida, Texas, New Jersey, Indiana, Michigan, Wisconsin, Iowa, Washington, South Dakota, and Illinois. Most of them, naturally reside in Illinois, the state where their forefathers originally settled.

The annual reunion is an all day affair, families arriving in the morning with basket lunches, spending most of the day visiting old friends, whom they may not have seen for a year or more, leaving in the early evening. Climax of the day's events is a mass meeting in the afternoon at which old time German airs are sung, business matters are discussed, new officers are elected, and plans for the next year's reunion are made.

And the enjoyment that comes to the audience is as great and even more so sometimes than if they were listening to the original artists in person.

The talent in the community is developed in this manner, a larger and finer Community Spirit is fostered and everyone is made hap-

Henry Schoeneck, Prominent Frankfort Farmer Drops Dead

Henry Schoeneck, aged 69 years, well known Frankfort township farmer, died very suddenly of an apoplexy attack while assisting in baling hay on the Henry Menke farm about 11:45 a. m. Tuesday.

Mr. Schoeneck had not complained of not feeling well and appeared in his usual cheerful mood when he arose Tuesday morning. Mr. Schoeneck was always ready to assist his neighbors in farm work and when Mr. Menke was starting to bale hay Mr. Schoeneck was ready to help in the work. With his grandson Kenneth Warning of Mokena he went to the Menke farm shortly after breakfast. Hay baling was interrupted for a while by a light rain and toward noon the weather cleared up and work was resumed. Mr. Schoeneck was working along with the rest of the men when without a sound or warning he suddenly pitched forward and fell to the ground. His grandson was immediately by his side, but Mr. Schoeneck only gasped for breath a brief second and was dead. Everyone on the Menke farm was greatly shocked and surprised at the suddenness of the attack and apparently instant death. A physician was summoned and pronounced Mr. Schoeneck dead.

The sudden death came as a great shock to the immediate family and friends. Mr. Schoeneck was born April 28, 1868 on the farm on which he has resided all his life in Frankfort township.

He attained the age of 69 years, 1 month and 11 days.

Chicken Thieves Busy Again

Chicken thieves are again busy in Will county. They pulled a series of raids in various parts of the county last week, one being made on the chicken house of Wm. C. Bettenhausen supervisor of Green Garden township.

First of a series of three raids started last Thursday when Wm. H. Bettenhausen Green Garden township reported that wires to his pasture were clipped and the fowl hauled away in a truck. It was the first time in several weeks that he had not hooked up a burglar alarm and the first time for sometime that a cross bull had not been pastured in the field where the thieves walked through.

At the Bettenhausen raid the only apparent reason for clipping the fence was so that the thieves would not have to climb over it while walking back to the truck with the sacks of chickens. Three hundred were taken.

Look At This, Pinochle Fans

Here is something for pinochle fans to shoot at. Last Saturday night Everett Luther of New Lenox melded a mere 1200 points in a pinochle game. Luther picked up his hand of cards dealt by T. H. Perryman, to discover 1000 aces, a sequence and pinochle.

Awarded Damages In Auto and Wagon Collision Case

Miss Bernice Weichbrodt, bookkeeper at the Frankfort State Bank, was awarded damages of $119.84 and costs against Charles L. Subbert, Peotone township farmer, by Circuit Judge Edwin L. Wilson late Thursday.

After hearing a day's testimony, Judge Wilson held that Subbert was to blame for an accident that occurred on route 51 near the intersection of U. S. 45 on November 4, 1933.

Miss Weichbrodt claimed that Subbert was driving a team and wagon after sundown without a light on the wagon and that she was entitled to the damages when her automobile collided with the wagon.

The case had been appealed to the circuit court from Police Magistrate J. C. Knight of Frankfort, who also entered a judgment in the amount asked when the farmer did not defend the action in the lower court. Attorney Albert H. Krusemark represented Miss Weichbrodt, while Pence B. Orr was counsel for Subbert.

SYNOPSIS

Brooke Reyburn visits the office of Jed Stewart, a lawyer, to discuss the terms of an estate she has inherited from Mrs. Mary Amanda Dane. Unwittingly she overhears Jed talking to Mark Trent, a nephew of Mrs. Dane who has been disinherited. Mrs. Dane had lived at Lookout House, a huge structure on the sea, built by her father and divided into two, for her and Mark's father. Brooke had been a fashion expert, and Mrs. Dane, a "shut-in," hearing her on the radio, had invited her to call and developed a deep affection for her.

CHAPTER I—Continued

"It's a fairy story brought up to date. Only, for the spell of a witch, substitute the broadcast of a girl's voice. The little schemer got not only the money but Mary Amanda's jewels, many of which were my grandmother's."

Brooke dropped her hands from her ears after what seemed hours. Still talking? Perhaps Jed Stewart was talking to the office boy. She heard him say:

"Your aunt said in her will, remember, that if she left the jewels to you, you might—well, that Miss Reyburn would appreciate them. She relented toward you to the extent of naming you legatee should the girl die without children; she was canny enough to prevent her fortune from falling into the hands of her family. You wouldn't think Brooke Reyburn a schemer if you saw her; you'd know that she had a background of cultivated living. She has a vivid face with a deep dimple at one corner of her lovely mouth; her voice is sweet, spiced with daring. She came out of college to carry her whole darn family when her father died—he was one of the tragic twenty-niners whose investments were wiped out—now, I suppose, her brother, who is acting in a stock company, and her sister will chuck their jobs and settle down on her. Her hair is like copper with the sun on it; her eyes change from brown to amber, and when she smiles at me I feel as cocky as a drum major at the head of a regiment."

"Help! You're raving, Jed. Perhaps you're thinking of marrying her?"

"Marry her yourself, Mark, and keep the fortune in the family."

"I! Marry that girl who hypnotized an old woman into leaving her a fortune! You're crazy. Besides, I am married."

"You haven't caught your aunt's ideas on divorce, have you? You don't feel tied to that woman who ran away with that French count, do you? You divorced her, didn't you? You—"

"Hold everything! We were talking of the Reyburn girl. You have nerve to make the suggestion that I marry her. Men have been put on the spot for less. I wouldn't marry that schemer if—"

Brooke flung back the hanging in a passion of rage.

"Nobody asked you to!" She cleared her voice of hoarseness, and flamed:

"Has it never occurred to you, Mark Trent?" She stopped, her eyes wide with amazement. Was this really the man who had pulled her from in front of that speeding car? After the first flash there was no recognition in his eyes, nor any concern, rather a quiet mockery, which, she felt, at the first word of hers would turn into active dislike.

"You! You—" Her breath caught in a laugh that was half sob. "What a mean break for you that you didn't know who I was, that you didn't let that car hit me! Then you would have had the money."

She had never seen a face so colorless as Mark Trent's as his eyes met hers steadily.

"Lucky I didn't know who you were, wasn't it? I might have been tempted. Schemers somehow lead charmed lives."

For a split second Brooke thought that fury had paralyzed her tongue. She made two attempts to speak before she protested angrily:

"I'm not a schemer! I suppose it never has occurred to you that the 'Reyburn girl' may have loved Mary Amanda Dane? May have been glad to spend one evening a week in a homey old house away from her whole 'darn family' in a crowded city apartment?"

Failure of breath alone stopped Brooke's tirade. There was plenty more she could say, she was apt to be good when she started. A laugh twitched at her lips. The two men facing her couldn't have looked more stunned when she made her theatrical entrance had a hold-up man with leveled gun suddenly stepped from behind the hanging. So this was Mark Trent. She had been careful never to go to Lookout House when he was there, for fear that he might think she had planned to meet him. She had not realized that he would be so bronzed nor so tall, that his dark eyes were so uncompromising, nor that the set of his mouth and chin could be so indomitable. There was a fiery strong quality of life in him which sent prickles of excitement like red-hot slivers shooting through her veins. She knew now that she should have appeared from behind that hanging at Jed Stewart's first word.

Stewart's always ruddy face was the color of a fully grown beet. He coughed apologetically.

"Sorry, Miss Reyburn. Didn't know you'd come. I'll slit the throat of that secretary of mine for not telling me. So you two have met before? That's a coincidence."

"No coincidence about it, Jed. Apparently we were both on the way to this office to keep an appointment with you, when we 'met' in the street almost in front of this building."

Brooke's anger flared again at Mark Trent's cool explanation. She met the terrier brightness of Jed Stewart's gray-green eyes. She had liked him when she had come to his office in response to the court's amazing notification that she was residuary legatee under the will of Mary Amanda Dane. The black and white check of his suit accentuated the rotundity of his body. He puffed out his lips as he regarded her with boyish entreaty. She laughed.

"The present uncomfortable situation only goes to prove, doesn't it, Mr. Stewart, that listeners never hear any good of themselves? Though really I wasn't listening. I stepped behind the hanging to look at the marvelous view, and then—" "You heard Jed say that your hair was like copper with the sun on it, and—"

"I stuffed my fingers in my ears for a while, but I heard a lot more, a whole lot more," Brooke cut in on Mark Trent's sarcastic reminder, "before I heard you refuse to marry me."

"But that was before I had seen you." The suavity of his voice brought hot tears of fury to her eyes. Before she could rally a caustic retort, he picked up his hat.

"That's a bully exit line. I'll be seeing you, Jed. Hope you'll enjoy the house and the fortune, Miss Reyburn. Happy landings!" He laughed. "I'd better say, 'Safe landings!' You're such a reckless person."

"Hi! Fella!" With an impatient jerk, Mark Trent shook off the hand on his sleeve, rammed his soft hat over one eye, and closed the door smartly behind him. Stewart relieved his feelings in an explosive sigh and pulled forward a chair.

"That seems to be that. Sit down, Miss Reyburn, while I tell you about the allowance which will be made you while Mrs. Dane's estate is being settled."

CHAPTER II

From the lighted stage Brooke Reyburn looked into the auditorium of the department store in which she had worked for four years. She had begun by modeling sports clothes, and because she had loved her work and had given it all the enthusiasm and drive there was in her she had been promoted steadily. The first of this last year she had been made head fashion adviser and had been set to Paris. She had made frequent trips to New York, but never before had she been abroad. Now she was talking for the last time to a hall full of women, many of whom she had come to know by sight. She had given her last radio talk. It was the end of her business career.

As she stepped from the stage, Mme. Celeste, the autocratic head of the store's department of clothes for women, stopped her. A hint of emotion warmed the hard blue of her eyes as she caught Brooke's hands.

"Cherie," her French was slightly denatured by a down-east twang, "I shall lose my right hand when you go. Why did that meddling old party want to butt in and leave you money? You were on the way to making it here."

"I shall miss you, Mme. Celeste." Brooke's voice was none too steady. "Perhaps you won't have to long. In this here-today-and-gone-tomorrow age, money doesn't stay in one pocket. Remember, cherie, whenever you want a job, come to me. You'll be needing one. Au revoir!"

"Cheering thought that I may lose the fortune," Brooke reflected, as she approached her office across the hall. Suddenly the black letters:

MISS REYBURN

on the ground-glass panel of the door jiggled fantastically. She blinked moisture from her lashes—she hadn't supposed she would feel choky about leaving. She opened the door, closed it quickly behind her, and backed against it as a man slid his feet from the corner of her desk. His black hair shone like the coat of a sleek well-brushed pony; his dark eyes were quizzically amused as they met hers; his teeth were beautifully white; he was correctly turned out in spic and span business clothes. He was likable, but there was something missing—rather curious that never before had she felt it.

"How's tricks?" he inquired gaily.

"How did you get in here, Jerry Field?"

"Easy as rolling off a log. A taxi, an elevator, a few strides on shanks mare, and here I am."

"I've told you time and again not to come to my office."

"While you were on the job, you said, sweet thing. I've stayed away and all the time the old wolf jealousy gnawed at my heart. I've imagined you here entertaining the male heads of departments and letting them, or stopping them, make love to you."

"You've been seeing too many movies. How you dramatize life. You have been miscast. Instead of being born a rich man's son and spending your days dabbling in paint and the stock market, you should be on the stage. With your flair for good theater, you'd be packing them in. Perhaps Sam can get you a chance in his company. Have you seen the play in which he is acting?" she asked with a quick change from lightness to gravity.

"Yes. Your brother's good."

"But you don't like the play?"

"I can't hand it much."

"Neither can I. It's a dummy with not a breath of life, not a drop of red blood, just clever epigrams and stuffed-shirt characters. I wish Sam hadn't been cast in it."

"Don't worry. It won't last long. What's the next play on the stock list?"

"The Tempest." The apartment rings with, 'Bestir! Bestir! Heigh my hearts! Cheerily, cheerily my hearts!'"

"You're not bad yourself, Brooke. Why didn't you take to acting?"

"I ought to be good. We children were raised on dramatics and quotations. It was Father's habit to orate when he was shaving, and we could spout Shakespeare before we could spell. Besides being a publisher, he was a playwright for amateurs, but Sam is ambitious to write for the professional stage; he has one three-act comedy finished, that is, as finished as a play can be until it is put into rehearsal. That is why he is acting, that he may know all there is to know of stage technic. I've had theater enough in my late job. Late! I can't believe that I'm through. Come on, Jerry, before I sob on the shoulder of that display figure. I asked the girls not to come to say good-by as if I were going away forever. They gave me a grand farewell party last night, and I have perfume, hosiery, and bags enough to last the rest of my natural life. Go ahead. I want to snap out the light myself."

As she stopped on the threshold, Jerry Field caught her arm.

"Hey, no looking back. Remember what happened to Lot's wife. I'd make a hit, wouldn't I, tugging a pillar of salt round the dance floor." He shut the door smartly behind them.

Brooke blinked and swallowed. "Okay, Jerry, from now on I go straight ahead like an army with banners, but straight ahead doesn't mean teeing and dancing with you tonight."

When they reached the already darkening street, Jerry Field demanded:

"Won't you go stepping with me now?"

"No, thanks. I am going home to plan with the family about moving, and to plot the curve of our domestic future."

"Look here, Brooke, don't persist in that silly idea of living in the house Mrs. Dane left you. It's all right for spring and summer, but what will you do marooned on a rocky point of land almost entirely surrounded by water when the days get short, in a place where the residents dig in and nothing ever happens? If you were here in the city," he urged, "I could pick you up in a minute and we could go places. To date you've handed out the excuse that you were too busy. People are planning to winter there, are they? That's an idea. You won't lose the fortune if you don't live in the old place, will you? It wasn't a condition?"

They were walking toward the crimson and jade sunset against which a huge electric clock seemed colorless.

"No. Mrs. Dane merely left a note with her lawyer, in which she wrote that she wished I would live there for two years, or at least until I had cleared the house of her belongings, that she knew that I would not laugh at her treasures, that I would understand, and that I would care for her parrot, Mr. Micawber. That parrot leaves me cold, Jerry. So you see, I must live in the house for a while—now that the lordly Mark Trent has given permission. I—"

"What has Mark Trent to say about it?"

Brooke looked up in surprise as they waited for the traffic light at the corner to change to red and yellow.

"Don't bite. Do you know him, Jerry?"

"Sure, I know him," he replied shortly.

Bedouins Hospitable

Besides being one of the picturesque nomads of the desert, the Bedouin is "most hospitable," says a writer. A Bedouin host thinks it humiliating to ask his guest his name, his destination, or the time of his departure. It is a recognized law of the desert that if a stranger appears at your tent and your sheep are grazing far away, you are entitled, in order to follow the ancient law of hospitality, to steal a neighbor's sheep and to slay it in honor of your guest. This is a sort of borrowing and not literally stealing as the law is observed by all neighbors. Hospitality is not limited to food and drink, but includes affording the guest protection should his life be threatened. If a guest's belongings are stolen, the host will make every effort to have them restored.

Spots in America That Resist the Melting Pot

Festivals of Various Kinds Call Attention to "Bits of Europe" Here.

"It takes celebrations like a tulip festival to call one's attention to the many 'bits of Europe' scattered throughout the United States," says a bulletin from the National Geographic society.

"Recently thousands of flower-loving Americans descended on Holland, Michigan, to witness the town's annual tulip festival. The gay blooms stretching for eight miles, lure visitors each spring to this largely Dutch community sprinkled with Dutch names and, for the festival period, with residents in Dutch costumes."

A "Little Greece" in Florida.

"Holland is one of the largest Dutch communities in the United States. Until recently, many of its factory workers spoke only Dutch, and neighboring farmers wore wooden shoes."

"Tarpon Springs, about half way down the west coast of the Florida peninsula, is the home of many swarthy, mustachioed Greek sponge divers and their families. They came to the warm blue waters of Florida fisheries from the sponge fishing grounds of the Mediterranean, and have made Tarpon Springs famous as a 'sponge city.' Their brightly painted diving boats are patterned after those used in Greek waters. The town supports a Greek Orthodox church, and on January 6 annually celebrates Greek Cross day, a religious fete brought from the homeland."

"Northwestern Pennsylvania has its Russians. Nearly half a century ago, some 'Old Believers,' descendants of seceders from the Russian church in the Seventeenth century, settled in Erie. The Russian colony now numbers about 2,000 inhabitants. Folk songs are sung to balalaika accompaniment by bearded men and long-haired women."

Finns Settled in Forest Lands.

"Although Finns dwell in small numbers in every state in the Union, they have not found the South appealing, and have settled chiefly in Michigan, Minnesota, Massachusetts, and Washington. From Finland, 'the Land of a Thousand Lakes,' they have been especially drawn to Minnesota. Their physical stamina and experience as lumberjacks in Finland's vast forests have fitted many of them particularly well to take part in America's lumber industry."

"The Finns retain their love of education, flocking to schools and night classes. As in their home land, they build log bathhouses in which to take steam baths, and carve from birchwood skis which carry them over the fields in rigorous winters. Finland, Suomi,

Somehow the Proverb Sounded a Bit Off

He had only recently joined the ranks of politicians, and he was anxious that his first speech to his prospective constituents should be a great success, says London Answers.

He spoke for a long time, warning his hearers of the dangers of war and the importance of keeping a large army. Wishing to finish with some quotation, he thought of the proverb about locking the stable door. But he wanted to be a bit more original.

Suddenly he had a brain-wave. "Ladies and gentlemen," he cried, "don't, I beg of you—don't wait till your house catches fire before calling the fire brigade."

Your Job

DO YOU realize that your job is the most important affair in the world, just because it is your job? The way you look at your job makes all the difference to your career. Do you regard it only as a money-making stunt? Or do you consider it a position to be proud of?

If you put your heart and soul into your effort, you are bound to make good and will wake up one fine morning to discover that you are one of the indispensable. The world respects you because it cannot get along without you.—Geoffrey Rhodes.

Toimi, and Toivola are some Minnesota place names that tell of Finnish population.

Shipping Lures Dalmatians.

"For centuries Dalmatians have either tilled the soil or sailed under Ragusan and other flags all over the world. Today these dark, spirited people, with blood of bold sea rovers in their veins, not only man the orange-sailed fishing boats off the Dalmatian coast, but they man American ships and work in fisheries of Louisiana, Florida, and California."

"From green vineyards, gray olive groves, fig and orange orchards steeped in almost perpetual sunshine along the Dalmatian coast, have come many of the large commercial fruit growers of the Pacific coast, particularly those in Santa Cruz and Santa Clara counties. Watsonville, south of San Francisco, has a population almost entirely Yugoslavian."

"The majority of fishermen in Provincetown, Massachusetts, are Portuguese. Their ancestors sailed there on whalers from Portugal and the Azores. The city directory is filled with names that sound strange among those of most New England towns: last names such as Silva, Ramos, Furtado, Costa, Zora, Dutra, Cabral, Almeda, Agna, and Corea."

Firestone TIRES

GIVE YOU GREATER PROTECTION AGAINST SKIDDING AND BLOWOUTS

YOU will know the minute you see this tire why car owners everywhere call it the greatest tire ever made to sell at these low prices. The deeper, wider, flatter non-skid tread made of tough, long wearing rubber will give you protection against dangerous skidding.

But tires cannot be judged on tread alone. Under the tread of Firestone Standard Tires are two extra layers of Gum-Dipped cords. This Firestone patented construction feature binds the tread and cord body into one inseparable unit. Every cotton fiber in every cord in every ply is saturated and coated with pure liquid rubber which counteracts the internal friction and heat that ordinarily destroy tire life. This Firestone patented process of Gum-Dipping gives greater protection against blowouts and is used only in Firestone Tires.

See your nearby Firestone Dealer or Firestone Auto Supply and Service Store and join the Firestone Save a Life Campaign today by equipping your car with a set of new Firestone Standard Tires.

Two Yorkshire men bought a hencoop. As they had a long way to carry it home a friend volunteered to help. The purchasers began their long trudge, complaining bitterly of its weight. Half-way home one of them suddenly remembered the helper. "Where's Jim?" he cried. From the hen-coop came an answering shout: "Ah'm inside carrying th' perches!"—Philadelphia Inquirer.

"God the Only Cause and Creator" was the subject of the Lesson-Sermon in all Churches of Christ, Scientist, on Sunday, June 6.

The Golden Text was, "In the beginning God created the heaven and the earth" (Genesis 1:1).

Among the citations which comprised the Lesson-Sermon was the following from the Bible: "Ye are my witnesses, saith the Lord, and my servant whom I have chosen: that ye may know and believe me, and understand that I am he: before me there was no God formed, neither shall there be after me. I am the Lord, your Holy One, the creator of Israel, your King" (Isaiah 48:10, 15).

The Lesson-Sermon also included the following passages from the Christian Science textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," by Mary Baker Eddy: "The Scriptures imply that God is All-in-all. God is divine Principle, Love, the universal cause, the only creator, and there is no other self-existence" (p. 331).

Report of Annual Meeting of The First Church of Christ, Scientist

Boston, Mass., June 7 — Progress of Christian Science expressed in the organization and recognition of fifty-nine new churches and societies; in sales increases of 66 per cent for the writings of Mary Baker Eddy, Discoverer and Founder of Christian Science; in an increasingly friendly public thought as reflected by legislative bodies when handling measures involving medical and religious freedom; and in much good healing work; featured reports today by church officers at the Annual Meeting of The Mother Church, The First Church of Christ, Scientist.

The election of Judge Clifford P. Smith of Newton, Mass., as Church President for the coming year, and of Edward L. Ripley of Brookline as Treasurer, and Ezra W. Palmer of Marshfield as Clerk, was announced. The President is elected by The Christian Science Board of Directors to serve for one year. His duty is to be presiding officer at the Annual Meeting.

Clifford P. Smith, C. S. B., LL. B., became interested in Christian Science at Mason City, Iowa, in 1896, where he practiced law before becoming judge of the District Court of Iowa, the superior court of that state. He has been a member of The Mother Church since 1902, and was one of its Executive Members. He had class instruction from an authorized teacher in 1901. Primary instruction from The Christian Science Board of Education in 1903, and Normal instruction from this Board in 1910.

Judge Smith has been in the service of The Mother Church occasionally since 1905 and continually since 1908. The positions he has held include the following: member of a committee to define and preserve the legal rights of Christian Scientists, First Reader of The Mother Church, Trustee of The Christian Science Publishing Society, President of The Mother Church, member of The Christian Science Board of Lectureship, teacher in The Christian Science Board of Education, Manager of Committees on Publication, Editor of The Christian Science Journal, Sentinel, and Herald. Since 1932 he has been Editor of The Mother Church's Bureau of History and Records. He also had the privilege of rendering particular services under the direction of our Leader, Mary Baker Eddy.

Judge Smith declared in his address that "To insure its strength and success, an organized movement requires (1) a good purpose clearly stated, (2) an intelligent plan for achieving this purpose, (3) active co-operation in accordance with the plan by the persons who compose the movement."

"The Christian Science movement has the first of these essentials in our Leader's writings on the nature and purpose of our Church. The second of these essentials (a practical plan conceived in wisdom) we have in our Church Manual. The third essentials can be restated for our movement as active and united efforts to communicate, demonstrate, and propagate the Science of Mind-healing. For this essential, the responsibility rests on all Christian Scientists collectively and individually. The obligation to prove by its effects that our religion deserves its name is not limited to listed practitioners; this obligation extends to all who are enrolled as Christian Scientists."

The facts that the Christian Science denomination has 2781 branches was cited and Miss M. Rosamond Wright, Manager of the Department of Branches and Practitioners, reported further for the year, "Good growth in our movement is shown through the organization and recognition of fifty-nine new churches and societies as branches of The Mother Church, and six new university organizations. Twenty-five of these branches are in Europe, thirty in North America, two in Australia, one in Africa, and one in South America."

The Christian Science Board of Directors, in its message read by the retiring chairman, Mrs. Nelvia E. Ritchie, told Christian Scientists everywhere, "The inspiring reports and testimonies of healing that have come to this Board during the past year give abundant proof of work well done, of progress throughout the movement — give evidence of obedience to Principle, and bear witness that the truth Jesus demonstrated is again understood and made manifest on earth today. While these splendid evidences of progress give cause for rejoicing and we humbly bow our heads in gratitude to God for these proofs of His power and presence, yet as students of Christian Science we all realize that greater works are before us."

"It is our sacred duty and privilege to uphold righteous government and to know that in reality divine Mind, with its attributes of intelligence, wisdom, justice, and mercy, always guides and controls the avenues and channels through which government is expressed. As we look upon the apparent unrest and fermentation in the affairs of the world today, it is heartening and comforting to know that by obedience to the teachings of our Master we can be conscious of the government of divine Principle, and actually see this government made manifest in human affairs and universal peace established."

William M. Bartlett, Secretary of the Trustees under the Will of Mary Baker Eddy's writings in 1936 increased 6 per cent over sales in 1935. An accounting of expenditures in excess of $200,000 during the year ended April 30 was also rendered. In fulfillment of the purpose of the will, the items for which this fund was used included assisting 33 churches and societies in erecting, purchasing or remodeling buildings; helping churches with lecture activities; and for free distribution of Christian Science literature.

In the report of the Manager of Committees on Publication, the Hon. C. Augustus Norwood declared:

"During the year, secular newspapers published approximately one hundred thousand excerpts from our Lesson-Sermons, each of which showed that Christian Science is based on the Bible. Radio stations carried some nine thousand religious programs, each of which included passages from the Bible and from Mrs. Eddy's writings. Secular newspapers reprinted about twelve thousand religious articles from The Christian Science Monitor, and more than two hundred and fifty radio stations now carry 'The Monitor Views and News.'"

"We are glad to report that public thought, which is reflected in legislative bodies, has become sufficiently free from prejudice so that Committees have been able to prevent the passage of many measures which would have restricted the rights of Christian Scientists."

The place of Christian Science periodicals in carrying on healing ministry, disseminating inspiration for humanity that it may find relief from its burden of sickness and sin, featured the report of The Christian Science Publishing Society, presented by Roland R. Harrison, Manager. Mrs. Eddy's statement on page 271 of Miscellaneous Writings was quoted, that students of Christian Science "should take our magazine, work for it, write for it, and read it." This applies to all the periodicals, it was concluded.

Judge Frederick C. Hill, Chairman of the Christian Science Board of Lectureship, reported 3216 lectures had been delivered during the year ended April 30. Of these lectures, 53 were given in Africa, 54 in Australia, 7 in Hawaii, China, Japan and Manila, 1 in the City of Mexico, 8 in Bermuda, Canal Zone and West Indies, 242 in Great Britain and Ireland, 129 in Continental Europe and Scandinavia, and 2722 in Canada, the United States and Alaska.

"The press has been very generous in contributing space for the publication of lectures reports," Judge Hill declared.

Edward L. Ripley, Church Treasurer, expressed gratitude for the increased individual activity accomplished by members of The Mother Church and added that "in disbursing the funds so generously contributed for flood relief, excellent service was rendered by the Committees on Publication and the various relief workers. That the relief extended was greatly appreciated is evidenced by the following messages among the many received:

"One expressed gratitude for the loving service rendered to both Scientists and non-Scientists."

"Another wrote: 'I shall always be mindful of the joyful manner in which this assistance was given when no other help was obtainable.'"

"A third said: 'The manifestation of joy and brotherly love by the workers . . . is most inspiring and is noticed and spoken of in praise by persons knowing little or nothing of Christian Science.'"

"A publisher who would not even advertise our lectures, was so impressed by assistance given him that he has since been carrying Lesson-Sermon excerpts, and has offered to carry a full lecture report."

In the report of the Clerk, Ezra W. Palmer, attention was drawn to the international appeal of Christian Science as indicated by the fact that the instructions for filling out Applications for Membership in The Mother Church are now available in eleven languages.

"The Mother Church, built on the Rock, Christ, is a mighty power for righteousness," he declared. "It is leavening, transforming, and spiritualizing thought throughout the world, both within and without the Christian Science movement. Gradually, but surely, barren dogmas and false concepts which obstruct the flow of light from God to human consciousness, are fading away as the spiritual idea of Church becomes clearer and dearer to the seekers for reality."

News From Springfield

By Bernice T. Van der Vries
Representative 7th District
General Assembly of Illinois

"A message from the Governor" carried over the loud speaker system from the Clerk's desk in the House excited immediate interest among the members as it usually means a veto message.

When the members realized on Tuesday afternoon that the veto message this time referred to the permanent registration bills for the country towns in Cook county there was a rush to the Speaker's platform by the members from the 6th, 7th, 13th, and 23rd districts which were affected by the bills involved in the veto message.

It all came about because House bill No. 231, the key bill in the registration program, was amended in the Senate then sent back to the House for concurrence in the Senate amendments and allowed to repose on the Speaker's desk. In the meantime five companion bills which were not amended went directly to the Governor. After ten days had elapsed the Governor was forced to sign, file or veto the five bills and the latter course was necessary in order not to leave registration in the territory involved in a chaotic state. Following the reading of the message, in the absence of Mr. McGrath the sponsor of the bills, Mr. Foster served notice on the House that the bills should be passed "the Governor's veto notwithstanding."

On Thursday the House concurred in the Senate amendments to House Bill 231. Either the Assembly will pass the other bills over the Governor's veto or new bills will be rushed through to take care of necessary details in the new registration system.

On Tuesday afternoon a bill, No. 1001 was introduced in the House by representatives McGrath, Foster and Van der Vries. This was an emergency measure to permit the town of Stickney to hold a town meeting before July first for the purpose of levying a thirty mill relief tax. The bill was passed by the House on Thursday morning. The cooperation of Speaker Lewis speed ed up the passage of the Bill.

After another meeting of the Education committee in the House on Wednesday in which the question of a quorum was again raised when the State Board of Education bill was called, it was announced that a meeting of the committee would be held at nine o'clock on Thursday morning. By 9:15 a quorum was rounded up and it appeared that the bill would be considered, but when Representative Stewart, who is handling the bill for Senator Stuttle in the House, began offering amendments it was found that no copies of the bill were available for the members of the committee. This provided an opportunity for members opposed to the bill to insist upon copies of the bill before voting for amendments and the meeting was adjourned until next week. The few amendments which were offered by Representative Stewart disclosed the breach between the Governor and the Superintendent of Public Instruction, as one amendment would remove the latter as the executive secretary of the board and another would change the place of meeting from the Superintendent's office to any other place in the capitol building.

Senator Stuttle amended the bill (S. B. No. 147) providing for a $29,000,000 payment by the state to the State School Distributive fund to $17,200,000 during a session of the Senate on Wednesday.

House Bill No. 661 introduced by Mrs. O'Neill and of interest to school boards as it removes the rigid lines between building and educational levies, was passed by the House on Thursday morning.

The House calendar is now thirty four inches long with two columns of fine printing stating the number and subjects of bills as yet unconsidered. Bills are still being introduced and committees are turning out bills as rapidly as possible. Next week two sessions will be held on Tuesday and Wednesday in addition to the Monday evening and Thursday morning sessions. Already rumors are abroad that a special session will be necessary soon after July 1st to take care of the unfinished business of the regular session.

Orland School Class Prophecy

Following is the class prophecy delivered at the Orland Park public school commencement exercises on Thursday night, June 3rd:

On the return trip to New York in a T.W.A. plane in which I am employed as an air stewardess, I encountered my old friend Phyllis Bricey, who is making personal appearance in a New York studio. Phyllis, who was always a bit shy, had overcome her shyness and is now the blonde-haired, dark eyed, glamorous movie star seen so often on our screens here in the East.

We started talking and naturally our conversation turned back the pages of time when we were students in the Orland Park high school. It was from Phyllis I learned that Donald Uthe was sealing the heights of stardom in Hollywood. He got his start by signing a three-months contract when a director saw him in a play at high school.

She asked me if I had read Mae Reische's latest novel, "Scraps From Life." I said I had and enjoyed it very much. Flaming-haired Mae with her vivacious manner and sparkling eyes, who delighted in writing verses about the girls in school had turned out to be a famous playwright and authoress.

Phyllis was wearing a smart sport outfit which she told me she bought on Fifth avenue in New York on her last visit in a shop owned by Lila Enders, tall, dignified Lila with her large, dreamy eyes and lovely, whimsical smile. She deals exclusively in models imported directly from Paris. Movie stars just flock to her shop for stylish dresses.

As Phyllis and I continued to talk I disclosed to her the fact that the pilot who was handling the plane was someone she knew, but wouldn't tell her who it was. Just then the descent for landing was being made. After landing safely and seeing that her luggage was disposed of she turned just in time to see the pilot step from the plane. Imagine her surprise when she found that it was none other than Charles Mullins, who greeted her with a "hi toots." At least Charles' ambition to become a pilot came to be a reality.

After talking to Charles a while I insisted Phyllis spend the night with me in my apartment and that we go sight-seeing the next day. To this she agreed. After purchasing the evening paper we hailed a taxi and the driver proved to be a school mate Ray Glahn, who I remember liked to drive carefully.

We then slid the glass partition back and Ray joined in the conversation which followed. I asked him how his chum Warren Townsend was and he said that he was off on another wild animal hunt. "Ready wit' Townsend who kept the school room in an uproar with his wise-cracks and jokes turned out to be another 'Frank Buck'."

Phyllis then asked him how his wife, the former Betty Parks, was. He replied that she was a wonderful cook and a delightful housekeeper and that their twins Betty and Ray, Jr., were doing fine.

Just then the apartment in which I live came in view and we paid our fares, said goodbye and got out. After taking the elevator to the tenth floor we reached my rooms and I started dinner. Phyllis read the paper. During dinner she passed the remark that Jack Schussler's name had appeared in the paper in connection with an operation which he performed on a child's throat. Jack is a very famous physician who has succeeded where others have failed.

After dinner we turned on the radio and we heard a familiar name Eleanor Cox mentioned. The program arranged and carried out by her was just going on the air. After the program which consisted of popular songs sung by Eleanor to her own accompaniment of the accordion. We discussed plans for the next day which included a trip to the New York University.

Next day after arriving at the University, we were conducted into a mathematics class supervised by the renowned Professor Wm. Elkin who had taken up teaching as his career.

Teaching in the same locality but quite a different subject is Sherman S. Knox. He has chosen for his profession dancing and has made quite a hit with the girls when he does a tango.

Later in the afternoon we paid a visit to an orphanage. The door was opened to our knock by a sedate looking matron who looked for all the world the picture of kindness and sympathy. She somehow seemed familiar to me and before we left we found that it was our friend Ruth Arnold, who because she loved children was devoting all her time and attention to the guidance of these motherless waifs.

On our way home we crossed a beautiful bridge, the bronze tablet at one side inscribed with these words: Architect and Designer Gordon Doctor, who was known to all the school as "Bug."

Phyllis' train was leaving early that evening and she left me with the promise that she would come soon so that we could visit our friends once again.

Seek To Make Mon. Official Day For Holidays

Bills proposing that Monday shall be the official day for all holiday observance, with two exceptions, have been offered to the state legislature by Joseph H. Braun, general counsel of the Chicago Motor club. The announced purpose of the measures is to "lengthen the period of recreation, to preserve the continuity of the business week and to insure uniform observance of holidays meriting special observance."

Christmas day and New Year's day, because of religious and calendar significance, would not be affected by the proposed legislation, which was inspired by an article in the current (May) issue of Reader's Digest, written by Henry Morton Robinson. The article compared American holiday practice with that of England, where Monday observance of all holidays is general. The author, in commenting on American practice, said:

"We distribute our holidays so wretchedly among the days of the week—letting them fall like chance fruit from the calendar tree—that their full recreative value is lost. When we do get a day off—say a mid-week Memorial day—we frantically attempt to crowd too much into too short a time; the result is feverish, exhausting, unsatisfactory. Now in contrast to this hectic scurrying, consider the singularly blessed Labor day week-end which always includes a Monday. On this holiday we can spend at least two evenings in the comfortable certainty that we won't have to get up early the next morning and have at least two mornings when we wake up luxuriously with a full free day ahead."

Present legal holidays observed in Illinois include New Year's day, Christmas day, Lincoln's birthday, Washington's birthday, Independence day, Armistice day, Columbus day, Labor day, Memorial day, Thanksgiving day, and election day when members of the state legislature are being elected. National election day also is observed as a holiday every fourth year. For legal and banking purposes each Saturday afternoon and Sunday also are regarded as holidays. All courts are closed and no legal action (other than police) may be taken nor may banks collect on notes which fall due on a holiday date. Those holidays which happen to fall on Sunday are observed on the following Monday.

"The advantage of observing all holidays on Monday is so obvious that it is a wonder that the practice has not been instituted before now," Mr. Braun said. "Holidays would be longer—and safer because of the elimination of a need for haste, business would benefit because there would be no mid-week break in the continuity of commerce and those holidays which merit special observance would receive it."

The proposed bills would affect only those holidays which are now observed with a shutdown of activity by banks, other business houses and the public schools. Those which are marked only by special exercises and services, or special days such as election days, would retain their present character.

Baby Hippo Born

A precocious youngster was born at the Chicago Zoological Park in Brookfield on May 26.

The new arrival is a baby hippo, offspring of Bebe and Toto, mother and father respectively.

Long awaited, the 40 pound baby burst in upon the earthly scene on all fours. Before news of its coming had spread through the park the youngster was enjoying a good, old-fashioned swim. The mother looked on serenely. After all, hers has been a precocious family all along the line.

As a matter of fact, both she and Toto are members of the Memphis hippo dynasty, one that is known from coast to coast. Aunts and uncles of the newborn are proud possessions of many of the nation's most important zoos. And a brother, Puddles, now nearly two years old, is a star boarder at the San Diego zoo, where he was shipped last year in exchange for Reggie, 3,000 pound sea elephant.

Flag Day, 1937

By RAYMOND PITCAIRN

National Chairman
Sentinels of the Republic

"It is a whole national history. It is the Constitution. It is the Government. It is the free people that stand in the Government, on the Constitution. Forget not what it means; and, for the sake of its meaning, be true to your country's flag."

That admonition was spoken by a great American, long decades before the observance of Flag Day on June 14 of each year became our national custom. It gains in significance as the years roll on.

For the American flag is known to the world as the symbol of human liberty. It was born in a struggle for freedom. It has carried that message wherever flown—not only over our own continent but on all the winds of the world.

Today much of the world could welcome its message. For freedom and democracy are still under fire; in many lands the rights of liberty of speech, of thought, and of endeavor—symbolized by the Stars and Stripes through its century and a half of existence—are still imperiled.

And from the political scrapheaps of those nations which exalt domination by the few over government by the many, are frequently imported ideas which, if accepted, could dilute or destroy our own clear concepts of liberty.

Flag Day, 1937, will serve a noble purpose if it reminds us of those things. It will serve a still higher one if it refreshes in all of us the determination to preserve for our own posterity that precious freedom which our fathers won for us, and which their flag and ours still proclaims to all the world.

Bean, there are few matters to be straightened out before the announcements are engraved and dispatched to the youngster's relatives. For instance, he is anxious to learn whether the baby is a boy or girl. This is rather important but will take a little time.

The baby must have its fun first. There's a lot of things to do and its been here such a short while.

Death Reaps

Heaviest Motor Toll At Eventide

Death reaps her heaviest toll among motorists in the twilight hours between seven and eight p. m., but accidents are more frequent from five to six p. m., Secretary of State Edward J. Hughes pointed out in a safety bulletin issued this week.

Secretary Hughes said a recent survey disclosed that 8. percent of all motor vehicle fatalities recorded in the nation last year occurred between the hours of seven and eight in the evening. He said that accidents occurring at this hour numbered 3,990.

During the hours from five to six p. m., according to the survey, an even larger number of accidents were reported but the death rate was not as high. A total of 66,590 accidents were recorded and 7.7 percent of them proved fatal.

The most dangerous day of the week to be driving is Saturday but Sunday is almost as hazardous, declared Secretary Hughes.

Of the 864,800 motor vehicle accidents recorded last year 18.6 percent occurred on Saturday, Secretary Hughes stated. Sunday's contribution was 17.3 percent of the total accidents.

"Tuesday is the 'safest' day to be driving," says Mr. Hughes. "Last year only 11.8 percent of motor vehicle accidents occurred on Tuesday."

"During these more dangerous periods of the day and while motoring weekends, drivers should be constantly alert to avoid collisions."

Motorists were urged not to wait till darkness to turn on their lights. Many persons have been killed and injured because of this careless habits of some motorists.

Japanese Rooster Needs Four Train Bearers

Four Japanese children seem to get a big thrill from acting as train-bearers to this prize rooster, held by the proud owner. This type of fowl is common in rural areas of Japan, where the hobby of the farm folk is raising long-tailed chickens. The longer the tail, the more valuable the bird. They take extraordinary care of their pets to preserve the luxuriant appendages.

PETER RABBIT WATCHES FOR SIGNS

SOME people never see things because they never look for them. Peter Rabbit isn't that kind. My goodness, no! Peter is all the time looking and listening. You see, he is dreadfully afraid that he will miss something. So every minute that he is awake he is looking and listening. It was this way more than ever now. Sister South Wind had arrived and said that Mistress Spring was not far behind, and that she had come to waken all the sleepers so that they would be ready to greet Mistress Spring when she did arrive.

What puzzled Peter was how gentle Sister South Wind, whose voice was hardly more than a whisper, waked all the sleepers. Rough Brother North Wind had roared and whistled and howled through the Green Forest and over the Green Meadows all the long winter without waking one. In fact, the louder he roared the farther into dreamland the sleepers seemed to go. But when the gentle Sister South Wind wandered through the Green Forest and over the Green Meadows calling in just the lowest, softest voice, why, one after another they did wake up. Peter couldn't understand it, and finally he gave up trying to.

Wake up, wake up, you sleepers!
Come open wide your peepers!

Shadow Effect

Garlands of white handkerchief linen flowers are embroidered on brown marquisette for the shadow effect of this gown. It is made over a brown taffeta slip and has stiffened puff sleeves. Emeralds and diamonds are worn with it and the bag is emerald green.

But it was great fun to go about watching for signs that the sleepers had heard gentle Sister South Wind. Peter would listen with one long ear against a maple tree. He would hear just the softest little sound under the bark, so soft that you and I couldn't hear it if we tried. Then Peter would kick up his heels for joy. It was the sap running up to all the branches and out to the tiniest twigs of the maple tree that Peter heard, and he knew that the maple tree was awake.

Then he would go over to a swampy place where the ice had melted away and hold his nose while he peeped into the brown hood of the skunk cabbage to see if there were any signs of flowers there. It had a dreadful smell, and yet it made Peter feel glad all over, because it meant that the queer little plant was awake. Then he would go up in the Green Forest to a warm, sunny place he knew of and there he would pull away the dead leaves of last summer until he found a tiny, furry cap peeping up above the ground. Then he knew that dainty little Hepatica was awake. He would carefully cover her up again with the dead leaves that she might not catch cold, after which he would kick up his heels in the funniest way, just because it made him feel so good.

Everywhere there were signs, if you had eyes to see and ears to hear them. And Peter had both. The Laughing Brook, which had been silent all winter because Jack Frost had bound it with ice, was laughing a great roar of a laugh, for its banks were very full, and that was a sign. The brown buds on the willows, which all winter long Jack Frost had pinched his hardest and failed to open, had split their little brown jackets at the first touch of the soft fingers of gentle Sister South Wind, and out of them had popped little gray pussies, and that was a sign. Farmer Brown had begun to clean up his cornfield, and that was a sign. There were signs everywhere, and every one of them made Peter feel happier.

But most of all Peter listened for something that he longed to hear. Every little while he would sit up and listen and listen, with his long ears standing straight up. Sometimes he would think he heard it, but he couldn't be sure. Then he would hold his breath and listen and listen and listen. What was he listening for? Why, for the loveliest sound he knows of—the voice of Winsome Bluebird.

"If I could only hear that," sighed Peter, "then I would know for sure that Mistress Spring is almost here, for Winsome Bluebird is her herald and she is never far behind." And this is how Peter Rabbit happened to forget all about those strange tracks he had found deep in the Green Forest.

First Aid to the Ailing House

CLEANING A BOILER

LAST winter a neighbor of mine began to complain about his coal consumption. He said that he was burning more coal than he had the previous winter. As the months went on he growled more and more about the quantity of coal that he was shoveling. I finally went to his house for a look at his steam boiler. My first move was to open one of the clean-out doors above the firing door. As I suspected, I found the interior so clogged with dust that I wondered that the fire was able even to smolder.

I asked him why he had not kept the interior of his boiler cleaned out, and he said he had no idea it was necessary; that no one had ever told him anything about it. I found a flue-cleaning brush in a corner of the cellar, and poked it in to show him that what seemed to be a solid wall of dust was actually a passage. With a few explanations of what to do, I left him to give the boiler a thorough cleaning. He called me up the next morning to say that his fire was burning more briskly than it had been all winter, and that steam had come up in what was an incredibly short time.

His was an extreme case, for to all appearances the boiler had been running for years with no cleaning out of the dust that had collected within it. The cleaning of the inside of a boiler is of much more importance than home owners in general believe it to be. In burning, coal develops a fine dust that settles in the upper part of the boiler.

When the inside surfaces of a boiler are clean, the metal absorbs a maximum amount of heat from the gases and flames that pass over them. There is little waste of heat up the chimney. When dust is allowed to collect on the inside pas-

By Leicester K. Davis

THE method and manner of one's thinking play important parts in making life a success or failure. A life that is filled with the contentment which comes only from complete expression of the inner self, or one that is restless and dissatisfied through lack of it.

To the experienced palmist, the indication of the outlets through which both conscious and subconscious thought are striving to function are clearly indicated by the characteristics of the finger of Saturn.

The Scheming Finger of Saturn.

The predominant characteristics of this type are: (1) straightness, (2) the manner in which the finger, with hand extended, clings to the side of the forefinger.

As a rule, such a finger of Saturn seems extremely long when compared with the length of the forefinger. Its knuckles are full, with somewhat pronounced slenderness in the spaces between the joints. The entire finger, despite its length and prominence of the knuckles, is pleasing in contour. And while decidedly not overfleshy, neither is it what might be termed "skinny." The nail tip is inclined to taper, and the nail is usually of oval shape, well set. Under backward pressure the entire finger might be considered stiff were it not for just a hint of flexibility.

A Saturnian finger of this kind, without unfavorable indications in the palm or elsewhere, denotes a clear-thinking, ambitious mind that plans its purposes with care and somewhat selfishly and keeps them very much a secret until the time for action arrives.

DICTATOR ONCE DEPENDENT ON CHARITY

YOU may not agree with the principles advanced by Adolf Hitler, or you may be an enthusiastic admirer of his. In either case you will be interested in looking at the man and his life to see what lesson we may learn. Perhaps the greatest inspiration to be drawn from the German dictator's life is a word of encouragement for those whose early lives may seem failures.

Adolf Hitler was born on the Bavarian frontier of Germany in 1889, the son of a customs official who had political ambitions for him. The boy developed a desire to be an artist. His father opposed him, so Adolf refused to study in school. He was the despair of his father and mother. When he was eighteen, he went to Vienna and applied for admission to the Academy of Art. His art was too poor to qualify and they directed him to the architectural school, but his loafing in early grades made it impossible for him to pass entrance requirements there.

For three years he slept in a cheap men's hotel in Vienna, getting his meals at a monastery and occasionally begging from passers-by. In the winter he shoveled snow to make a living. Whenever he earned a few kronen, he stopped work and went to some cheap cafe to deliver political speeches. He painted poor water colors which a friend peddled for him, he painted picture postcards, and when hungry enough was a house painter. During the war he was a corporal.

Here was a man in his thirties who had never shown any real promise in anything he did. Then, Adolf Hitler formed an ideal of government.

FATHER DIVINE WAS A HEDGE TRIMMER

WHAT are the limits of human credulity? To what heights may not the spell-binding orator rise? For thousands of simple blacks in that section of upper New York city known as Harlem, the answer to those questions is "God! Only God is the Limit!" For George Baker, once a Baltimore hedge trimmer and dock worker, who is reported to have served 60 days on a chain gang, is the negro who claims to be God.

Early records of his life have not been found and George Baker, who now calls himself Father Divine or God, will not talk. It is known that he came from the South, and that he worked at odd jobs in Baltimore in 1899. Starting as a Sunday School teacher, he established a new cult, and moved to New York with a few followers who believed him to be God. New disciples joined him and were provided with food and lodging, while he found jobs for them and collected all their earnings. In 1919, he changed his name to Father Divine (God) and conferred the title of Angels on all who turned their possessions over to him. Thousands of dollars became his in return for new, more glamorous names, such as Ruth Rachel, Hozanna Love, and Frank Incense. Today Father Divine's Angels number about 1,000 and there are 3,000 "Children" or followers who retain some of their possessions, living in apartment houses and flats of Harlem. Heaven is his headquarters, where meals are served and where about 75 Angels sleep. He has established Extension Heavens now in Bridgeport, Jersey City, Newark, and Baltimore; and he owns profit-making stores and shops throughout Harlem. It has been estimated that his income is $10,000 per week, but no property is held in his own name.

Lesson for June 13

THE BROTHERLY LOVE OF
JUDAHLESSON TEXT—Genesis 44:18-34.
GOLDEN TEXT—Let brotherly love continue. Hebrews 13:1.

PRIMARY TOPIC—Benjamin's Big Brother.

JUNIOR TOPIC—Big Brothers.

INTERMEDIATE TOPIC—Loving as a Brother.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—Self-Sacrifice in the Family.

The fundamental unit of society is the family. It is of more importance than the state, the church, and the social order of which it is a part. The breakdown of the home and the sacred relationships sustained between parents and children, or brothers and sisters, points to the destruction of society itself.

God established the family in the garden of Eden. His plan and purpose have never been changed, nor have his laws for the protection of the home, for the sanctity of marriage, for brotherly love, been set aside. Men and nations may devise other plans and follow the dictates of the flesh, but that road always leads to ruin.

The continuation of our story of the life of Joseph and his brethren brings before us today the filial and paternal love of Judah, and affords us an opportunity to stress true brotherly devotion. No one should fail to review the connection between the chapter before us and the lesson of last week. Joseph had been dealing with his brethren who had failed to recognize him as the one they had sold into captivity. He was bringing them kindly but definitely to that point of repentance at which he could show himself gracious to them. In doing so he had brought disaster upon them. Being happy on their way homeward with a new supply of food, they were overtaken and Benjamin, the beloved of Jacob, stands accused as a thief, and by their own words condemned to die.

In this crisis the mouths of the ten others are closed, but Judah, who had really saved the life of Joseph (Gen. 37:26, 27), stands forth to make an eloquent and pathetic appeal to Joseph. It presents him as a brother who is

I. Courageous
Easy rests the yoke of family life as long as all is joyful and prosperous. But when adversity strikes, when sorrow comes, or sickness, or sin, then the true test of devotion is at hand.

It was a brave and manly thing for Judah to stand before the one whom he knew only as the man who was "even as Pharaoh." The circumstances were all against him. He expected the flaming anger of the offended ruler. His brethren had collapsed in despair. It was one of those dark hours which come to every family when someone must demonstrate true love by being strong-hearted and steady.

II. Intelligent.
Crises call for more than a cheerful smile or an encouraging word, much as they do mean in such an hour. But we must be prepared by our close contact with our loved ones to speak and act with vigor and assurance.

The plea of Judah is a masterpiece of logic, argumentation, and appeal, demonstrating that Judah was not only well-informed about his family and its problems, but ready to use his knowledge skillfully and effectively.

III. Sacrificial.

One step deeper goes the devotion of this man to his father and his brother. He has done no wrong that merits punishment, but evidently his brother has been guilty. Had he been of the spirit of Cain he would have said "Am I my brother's keeper?" and let him answer for himself. Why should he suffer for another? Why should he allow himself to be imprisoned in a strange land to save his father from sorrow and his brother from what seemed to be the just reward for his deeds?

Thus reasons the man of the world, but such is not the language of love. "Let thy servant abide instead of the lad as a bondsman"—so speaks the true brother. And this is but a faint prefiguring of the One "who sticketh closer than a brother," who "though he was rich, yet for your sakes became poor that ye through his poverty might be rich" (Prov. 18:24; II Cor. 8:9).

Let us improve the opportunity to review our relations with our own family, to determine whether there is aught that we in intelligent and courageous self-sacrifice should do for our own.

An Aim in Life

We want an aim that can never grow vile, and which cannot disappoint our hope. There is but one such on earth, and it is that of being like God. He who strives after union with perfect love must grow out of selfishness, and his success is secured in the omnipotent holiness of God.

Washington Digest

National Topics Interpreted
by William Bruckart
National Press Building Washington, D. C.

Washington.—Farm leaders have gone before congress again to press a new agricultural program. Like the last half-dozen years, the new proposition is based on a subsidy. The current program, like the old AAA, is predicated on agreements by which farmers will not do something and be paid for not doing it.

Urgent New Farm Program

To obtain the subsidies from the federal treasury contemplated in the new farm legislation, farmers will have to sign contracts agreeing to curtail their acreages up to twenty per cent of their average cultivation for the last several years. If they fail or refuse to sign these contracts, the legislation describes them as not co-operating and, therefore, they would be denied the right to obtain loans from the federal government and they would not have a guarantee of "parity prices," as a penalty. Moreover, those farmers who failed or refused to co-operate in this manner would be subjected to prohibitive taxes on the sale of products grown in excess of limits on totals to be prescribed by Secretary Wallace of the Department of Agriculture.

The announced basis of this new program is for "conservation of the soil." Further, its sponsors contend that it will mean a gradual upbuilding of the fertility of the soil so that, in the end, fewer acres will have to be cultivated to produce the same volume of corn or cotton or wheat or whatever other crop is grown.

But I think there are few individuals who will say that the above reasons honestly constitute the basis for this new farm legislation. I think it must be admitted that the plan is only a subterfuge; that, while it may help some farmers by giving them cash, it is pure politics with cash as a sop.

I am not one equipped to say that agriculture does not need a subsidy even though prices of farm products are now almost double what they were in 1933. It is entirely possible that farmers throughout the nation still need help in the form of cash. It may be the better part of wisdom to vote such payments as are contemplated in this new legislation. On the other hand, however, if there is that need then let us be honest about it.

President Roosevelt lately has signed a new law which provides subsidies to shipping companies in order that America may have its own merchant marine, but those payments are to be called subsidies. They are not disguised nor concealed. It seems ridiculous, therefore, that the farm leaders should not be frank with the members of their organizations. If they feel that a subsidy is needed, why not put it up to congress that way so that those farmers who believe in subsidies as well as those who want to see agriculture left alone for awhile can understand what is going on.

I imagine that the farm leaders who are sponsoring the new legislation could scarcely have chosen a presentation of their program. I mean that, in presenting this type of legislation when congress is undergoing a wave of economy, the program is likely to receive scant consideration. It always has been the case that legislation goes through several stages of hauling and filling in congress with the result that after much debate a bill satisfactory to the majority emerges. In presenting their program at this time, therefore, the farm leaders are not doing a very good job of leading. There will be much agitation on the part of the farm leaders that will get just nowhere at all because of conditions in congress.

Edward A. O'Neal, president of the American Farm Bureau Federation, recently was quoted as saying that the new plan would not require any payments direct from the treasury; that is, it would pay its own way through the medium of taxes if it "works perfectly." That is the rub. I find doubt in nearly all quarters that the plan can "work perfectly." It is so complex and requires such a bureaucracy for administration of it that to expect it to "work perfectly," is virtually to expect that legislation will control the weather. I think everyone will agree that congress and the administration has not yet been able to find the formula for controlling the weather.

I believe it can be said fairly that many farmers are dissatisfied with the soil conservation program adopted as a substitute for the AAA which the much criticized Supreme court held unconstitutional by a unanimous vote. Even those officials of the Department of Agriculture who are frank will admit that the soil conservation is not an effective means for controlling production. It does have merit as far as it goes in conserving the soil. But there is another phase: It has been pointed out too often almost to need repetition here that the soil conservation law, as occurred under the AAA, results in millions of dollars being paid to individuals and corporations who are in no way participating in conservation activities.

Now, while Mr. O'Neal thinks that the proposed law can be operated without expense to the federal treasury, there is yet the conviction in some quarters that it probably will cost about six hundred million dollars a year to pay the subsidies and pay for administration of the law. Six hundred million dollars a year is a large sum at any time and it bulks much larger at a time when there is a nation-wide cry for a balanced budget for the federal government. It is a sum that, if the budget of the federal government otherwise were balanced, would be sufficient to frighten thousands of holders of United States bonds.

It would seem then that the farm leaders ought to take into consideration the status of the federal government's financial affairs if they want to develop a program that will live. I have heard from many students of agricultural problems that the remedy for farm conditions is not an expensive new system of farm subsidies. They assert that it will be impossible for Uncle Sam to continue annual payments to some three million or more farmers and they are convinced, further, that most farmers themselves objected to being placed in the category of relief clients. An argument is also advanced that more and more farmers believe federal policies that cause money to be handed out free to farmers will, in the end, destroy the independence of agriculture. However that may be and however the majority of the farmers feel about receiving money gratis from the government at Washington, it cannot be said that agriculture is being placed on a sound footing by politicians and political farm leaders whose sole objective is to loot the treasury. Farmers would not permit it to happen to the governments of their states or their counties but a considerable number of them apparently have been persuaded that the government at Washington is something else.

The Department of Commerce which has supervision of airplane traffic has announced that it will not permit American pilots to participate in an air race that was proposed for this summer. The race was to have taken place from New York to Paris, but the Department of Commerce has vetoed the plan unequivocally because it considers the race as nothing more than a stunt.

Air Pilots Out of Races

It may occur to some that such a ruling by the Department of Commerce constitutes an interference with private business beyond reason. I cannot share that view. The experts have been unable to find in this proposed race any possibility of benefit for aviation nor any experimentation that would lead to more scientific flying. It has taken the position that there is too great a danger involved for those pilots who are foolhardy enough to undertake the three thousand two hundred mile flight across the ocean. Its position is further fortified with the argument that if any of the pilots should lose their lives in that type of aviation, it will cause many thousands of persons to lose faith in the airplane as a means of transportation. In short, the department thinks that there are only disadvantages and no advantages in the prospect.

While many persons may disagree with the position the department has taken, it is heartening to those of us who like to see private business encouraged, to know that a responsible federal agency charged with supervision of a private industry is again functioning as it was intended to do. For several years, the Department of Commerce, with particular respect to its aviation division, has been in a state of turmoil. There were wide differences of opinion and in consequence little in the way of permanent development was sponsored from Washington for the aviation industry.

In criticizing the government's inactivity, no observer would be fair unless he also called attention to the frailties and the failures of the industry itself. It is true that some of the larger lines lately have made sensational improvements in the equipment they use in the air and in the operations part of flying. It is true that larger and better planes have been built and are building. But it is likewise true that a number of airlines have adopted penurious, penny pinching policies and have refused to replace worn out and obsolete planes because they did not want to invest additional money. Until the air industry awakens to the necessity for spending money and until the Department of Commerce becomes a smooth functioning supervisory agent, the air travel of this country will not even approach the limit of its capacity.
